White Tea Powder

Flaxseed

White tea helps the body flush out toxins that accumulate in the skin. These toxins are partially responsible for skin problems such as acne, wrinkles, and uneven skin tone. Catechins found in white tea are: epicatechin (EC), epigallocatechin (EGC), epicatechin gallate (ECG), and epigallocatechin gallate (EGCG). As a result of their antioxidant activity, catechins are understood to protect against skin damage caused by reactive oxygen species (ROS). EGCG also inhibits ultraviolet (UV) radiation-induced oxidative stress to the skin and body, while simultaneously, boosting levels of antioxidant defense enzymes such as superoxide dismutase (SOD) and catalase.

The omega 3 fatty acids in flax seed increase the speed at which wounds heal. Flax seed is best known for its anti-inflammatory effects. You can successfully minimize skin irritation, rashes, inflammation and redness. Thus, benefits of eating flax seeds are many for the skin. Flax seed has wound healing properties due to its anti-inflammatory effect and high omega 3 fatty acid content. Eat them regularly to help speed up wound healing. If you have eczema patches, eating flax seed can make a difference. You can also use flax seed oil to help moisturize & heal dry, itchy & flaky eczema.
